SECOND RETIREMENT

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Scottish-born Donald McNicol Lowe ended a career as a civil engineer in Canada five years ago at age 75. But retirement did not sit well with the slim bachelor and he volunteered for service in this east African country. Now Lowe is heading back to a second retirement in Vancouver, B.C., after a two-year tour as a regional government engineer.

Trial Site Change Briefs Being Sent

VICTORIA, Tex. (UPI) —Dist. Judge Joe E. Kelley said Tuesday he was receiving change of venue briefs in the trial of a former Texas Southern University student charged with assault with intent to murder during the 1967 TSU riots.

The trial of Charles E. Freeman was first scheduled for Houston but Judge Wendell Odom granted a change of venue and it was rescheduled for Victoria.

Judge Kelly said he would review the briefs and make a decision. If he denies the change of venue the trial would be held in Victoria.

DOROTHY EDEN'S new bestseller

THE SHADOW WIFE

From the novel published by Coward-McCann, Inc. Copyright © 1967, 1968 by Dorothy Eden. Distributed by King Features Syndicate.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED

A chance meeting at a tourist attraction in Majorca brought Luise Amberley and Otto Winther together. Luise, who had gone to the island to recover from a broken love affair while writing vacation articles for a London newspaper, was strongly attracted to the tall and rather vague Dane. He said he was a widower with a son and daughter. Thought not ready to fall in love again, she found it difficult to be indifferent to his plea to prolong her visit to Majorca. Back in London, Luise received a letter from Winther declaring his love and asking her to visit him in Copenhagen. Luise's editor, Tim gave her an assignment there. Her first night in Copenhagen at the ballet, Luise was dismayed when Winther did not introduce her as his fiance to a business associate and further confused when Winther avoided his brother, Erik. But at Dragor, a seafront village, Winther induced Luise to marry him.

CHAPTER 9

I WAS able to smile during the ceremony, though I must say this was remarkably offhanded, and almost totally lacking in reverence. Indeed, the priest seemed in a great hurry to get it over. He also seemed nervous, and dropped the ring onto the wooden floor of his little parlor. It ran away into a corner, and his wife, who was one of the witnesses, a fat jolly woman who gave a little gurgle of mirth, had to look for it on her hands and knees.

The other witness was a rather dissolute-looking man who wore a fisherman's jersey.

I confess I heard little of the ceremony until I was asked, in English, if I, Luise Martha Amberley, would take Otto Frederick Gustav Winther to be my husband.

I said yes, and it was then that the ring foolishly rolled away. When it was at last safely on my finger, Otto bent to give me a smacking kiss and everyone laughed loudly.

Then the names were carefully entered on a certificate, and we all signed. The fat woman's name was Anna Hansen, and the fisherman's Jens Larsen. The priest was Peter Hansen. I noticed that name particularly.

To my alarm, just after dinner, Otto had a dizzy spell. We had gotten up from the table and were about to leave the dinner room when his hand came down heavily on my shoulder. He had to stand a minute leaning on me while he recovered himself. His face was suffused with a dark color. I got a bad fright. I thought he was about to have a stroke.

But in a moment he shook his head, and attempted to smile.

"It's nothing." His voice was a little thick, but otherwise normal. "Let's get some fresh air."

He was able to walk out of the room unaided. We paused for a minute or two in the hall, then Otto suggested going upstairs. The flush was dying out of his face. His eyes still looked a little strange, but he vigorously denied that he was ill when I asked him.

"One glass too many of champagne, that's all."

We went upstairs arm in arm. In our room, Otto sat in the armchair at the window for a little while. I believe he fell asleep, although he denied this twenty minutes later, when he opened his eyes and looked at me with his familiar warm look of love and excitement.

He was my husband, I thought with pride and pleasure. him, and a little anxious about I was already possessive about his blood pressure and that strange dizzy spell. Perhaps we should be carefull tonight.

This tentative suggestion made him angry and unfairly suspicious.

"Are you going to be the sort of wife who makes excuses? Who has headaches and other aliments?"

"It's not me who has the ailment," I pointed out gently. "You did worry me a little Otto. Have you had your blood pressure taken lately?"

He sprang up and reached out for me, pulling me toward him.

"I'll show you how high my blood pressure is. If you want to know, it's very high at this minute, and only you can lower it."

Otto was stirring: "What are you thinking Luise?" came his sleepy voice.

"About whether your brother would like me or not."

He frowned slightly, his eyes still closed.

"What Erik thinks isn't important. You won't be seeing much of him."

"Doesn't he live on the farm?"

"No, he has an apartment in Copenhagen. He's an architect. We're very different, I told you. He has brown hair, I have yellow. Do you like my yellow hair, mine kaer? Tell me."

Naturally, demonstrating my admiration for his looks led to vigorous response on Otto's part. Until suddenly he made a violent turn sideways as if to get out of bed, and instead fell out. He didn't crash to the floor. He slid quite quietly. He couldn't hurt himself. But he didn't get up or say anything. I leaned over, laughing, then stopped abruptly as I saw that he was twitching in a peculiar way. His eyes were rolled up, and a slight dribble came from his mouth.

I was terrified. For a moment I could only stare stupidly, clutching at my thumping heart. Water! That was it. Getting back my senses, I sprang out of bed and rushed to the bathroom.

When I got back with a filled tumbler, Otto had stopped twitching and was lying quietly, with his eyes closed.

For one terrible moment I thought he was dead. I flung the water in his face, then knelt down to mop it off with a corner of my nightdress. And he opened his eyes. And smiled, heaven bless him!

"Sorry, Luise," he said, quite naturally. "I hoped I wouldn't scare you like that so soon."

"What do you mean?" I demanded. How dare he lie there smiling when he had almost scared the life out of me!

He sat up slowly, shaking his damp head.

"You nearly drowned me. Give me a towel."

"Otto," I said, speaking quietly now, for my brain was beginning to function, "are you an epileptic?"

"Not exactly," he said in a muffled voice. "At least, only in a very mild way. I have what the doctors call petit mal. It isn't serious. I rarely have an attack. But I suppose last night, the excitement, and so on—forgive me for not telling you. I was afraid if I did you wouldn't marry me. This isn't hereditary," he said quickly. "It's due to a little brain damage I suffered at birth. Our child will be perfect. You'll see."

Our child. . .Already he was speaking as if one was on the way. Perhaps it was.

"It will happen again—"

"Not if I take my pills. I forgot last night. I was too full of happiness. I promise not to forget again. You can remember for me."

"Does that make it all right?"

"Perfectly. It's only I'm forgetful."

I remembered that once in Majorca he had had a bruise on his temple. He said he had bumped into a door.

"Does Erik have this — trouble?"

"No," he said sharply. "I told you it wasn't hereditary. Neither does Niels. Though of course—"

"Of course, what?"

"Of course, he wouldn't, any more than our son would."

I withdrew from his frostiness. What a time to be cross-examining him! My poor flawed Otto. I must be so kind, I must love him.

Mobile Clinic Display Slated Here Tonight

A medical and dental mobile clinic, sponsored in part by the First Baptist Church of Tyler, will be on display Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at the church grounds, according to John LaNoue, director of the Baptist Student Union at Henderson County Junior College in Athens.

The clinic, called Amigos Internacionales, Inc., is a nonprofit corporation housed inside a 48 passenger school bus.

LaNoue said members of the First Baptist Church in Tyler had given donations and several items to aid in the establishment of the clinic.

Ed Nusko, vice president of the First National Bank of Athens, and Jim Wren, real estate man from Athens, will be in charge of the clinic while on display.

The clinic, second of seven to be built, was established by LaNoue to aid the poor people along the Rio Grande River in the Big Bend area, Dr. Kerfoot P. Walker of Tyler helped plan the clinic.

The first clinic established is presently operating near Harlingen. LaNoue said the clinic was averaging 100 patients a week.

The main tasks of the U.S. Secret Service are to protect the President and investigate counterfeiting.
